

DOCTOR STABS WIFE IN JEALOUS DOUBT

Einterz, Who Rose From
Newsboy to Physician, Calls
Police Himself.

INSANE, FRIENDS THINK

While his twenty-year-old wife, whom he stabbed yesterday, with his surgical scalpel, after shooting her while she slept, lies dangerously wounded in St. John's hospital, Brooklyn, Dr. Samuel Einterz, of 709 E. 14th street, is locked up in the Tompkins and Vernon avenues police station, charged with felonious assault.

After thrusting the scalpel deep into his wife's breast just above the heart, Dr. Einterz telephoned the police station and said: "I have just killed my wife. Will you please send an officer around to my office at 709 E. 14th street to arrest me."

When Patrolman Farrell went to the house in answer to this strange call he found the doctor calmly smoking a cigar.

"What's the trouble here?" he asked. "Why, just what I said," answered the doctor. "I have killed my wife. I stabbed her with this scalpel."

After the doctor had been taken to the hospital, his friends, who are known to the police, said that he had been untruly to me. I thought that the best thing I could do was to kill her. You'll find her body in the next room. Now I'm ready to go with you."

Yesterday's occurrence was doubly tragic to the friends of Dr. and Mrs. Einterz, who know the romance that led to their marriage. For fifteen years Einterz, who has long been known in downtown business men simply as "Sammy," sold newspapers at the entrance to the Brooklyn Bridge. But always he cherished the ambition of affixing an M. D. to his name. He studied nights with indomitable spirit and denied himself even the necessities of life that he might save the money for the scientific books he needed. During his post-graduate training he was connected with a hospital in Newark. There he met a girl who was studying to be a nurse. When he was graduated from Bellevue he married the young nurse and began practice. That was three years ago. The couple have a two-year-old son who is being taken care of by Dr. Einterz's mother.

WOMAN ONE OF ACCUSED

After an investigation that had been going on for more than two years developments yesterday indicated that the mystery surrounding the shooting of Frederick Strauss, a deputy clerk in the City Court, in front of Arlington Hall in St. Mark's place on January 9, 1914, has been cleared. Eleven persons were indicted yesterday for murder in the first degree. One man is under arrest here and three are held in prisons in other parts of the country.

Deputy Assistant District Attorney Joyce believes that the street battle during which Strauss was killed was between the Jack Sirocco band and the followers of Dopey Benny Fein.

A woman gangster is accused in this case, but she is still a fugitive from justice. She took a revolver from her handbag and handed it to one of the men indicted. Witnesses say that she stood by while he used it.

Gangsters Hid Behind Strauss. According to the story told by these witnesses, the gangsters were fighting for supremacy and Strauss fell, an innocent victim of their fury. He was on his way to a meeting of his lodge when, in St. Mark's place, between Second and Robert W. Hubbard, Harry Lenny and Tommy Dyke, two of Jack Sirocco's lieutenants. These two were on their way to Arlington Hall to open the place for a ball game to be held for their benefit. At the sound of shots they got behind Strauss.

At the same time they opened fire upon the alleged gangster. Harry Lenny, alias Able Beckerman, who is now serving from one to five years for a recent bank holdup in Chicago, was indicted on a charge of assault. Irving Wexler, called also Benny Lustig and Wexler Gordon, who is doing two and one-half years in Sing Sing for larceny, and Ike Brown, a Jewish product, who has the reputation of being a good pickpocket, but who is serving five years in the United States penitentiary at Atlanta for illicit traffic in cocaine.

Transcripts of Correspondence in Seymour Office Produced.

New names will be implicated in the alleged testimony taken yesterday at the trial of William Burns, who is charged with war crimes from the office of J. P. Morgan & Co. by transcripts of correspondence given to the Morgan firm by J. Burns, the detective, as coming from the office of Seymour & Seymour, lawyers in the Equitable Building. These transcripts will be offered in evidence to the jury at the trial of Burns, which is set for tomorrow.

The transcripts, which were delivered yesterday to Assistant District Attorney William Harnad, who is prosecuting the case, have been examined by the jury. It has been testified Burns made from papers in the Seymour office when he went there at night and installed a telephone and having made them, gave them to Martin Egan, who represented the Morgan firm. They bear on the alleged stealing of war order tips from the Morgan firm and the peddling of them by outsiders.

Mr. Egan was the only witness at yesterday's session of the John Doe inquiry, and his testimony took just nine minutes. Then adjournment was taken until today at 11 o'clock, when William J. Burns, his son, Sherman Burns, and a number of his friends will take the stand to tell what they did in investigating the office of Seymour & Seymour for the Morgan firm.

Mr. Burns' testimony had to do almost entirely with the transcripts of papers in that office which will be offered in evidence today. He said frankly that he had received them from Burns after the latter had entered the Seymour office. Mr. Egan spoke also of a second "grapevine letter," which he turned out, was an answer from Mr. Burns, president of the Humboldt Fibre company, thanking O. B. Phillips, who has desk room in the Seymour office, for the first "grapevine letter," which told of the status of a war order as "the latest from the grapevine." This letter expressed Mr. Farrell's interest in the "grapevine" method of getting inside information.
